“ Arrived at my job as a part time maintenance man at a Texas Roadhouse this morning (4 Nov) and learn of John's passing. His co-worker was still shaken up as he broke the sad news to me. I interacted with John in the early mornings once a month for sometime. He taught me how to identify certain metals and the scrap business...since my job has me working with materials. I always enjoyed hearing his views on religion and politics. His insight was amazing to me and I mostly thought about his take on whatever we talked about while I was silently doing my job. He smiled each time I'd ask about his family (I always make it a point to ask about people's families if I'm enjoying the connection with them). He loved telling me about their lives. I can tell you he loved you all just by his overwhelming grin / smile. We talked about life's struggles and our issues, but he was like any proud individual and shrugged knowing we all have deep seated guilt and hoping it doesn't rear its ugly head again. I was so looking forward to hearing his take on the election...and man, he would've had one heck of an insight! I will pray for John's soul and for his family. RIP John.
